27J Board to consider mill-levy vote

On Tuesday the School District 27J Board of Education will consider whether or not to approve a resolution placing a mill-levy-override ballot question before electors of the District in the Nov. 7 election.

Tuesday's Board meeting, 7 p.m. at Prairie View High School, 12909 E. 120th Ave., is open to the public.

A November vote in favor of the mill levy would authorize additional local property-tax revenues for the General Fund, a news release stated.

The mill-levy override would provide "tools and talent," according to Superintendent Chris Fiedler during a recent presentation. Tools for the students would include access to technology and a curriculum-refresh rotation enabling 27J students to compete with other Denver metro districts. Talent means salaries for employees to retain and recruit high-quality teachers and support staff.

School District 27J's only successful mill-levy-override election occurred in 2000, in the amount of $750,000. According to the district, that equates currently to about $43 per student in additional annual revenue to educate the students in the district above and beyond revenue from the state via the School Finance Act. The average mill-levy-override revenue for the other 14 Denver Metro school districts is $1,306 per student. The average mill-levy-override revenue for the other four Adams County districts is $775 per student.

In 2015, District 27J voters did approve a $248 million bond issue to build new schools and renovate and expand existing ones.
